

TEACHER HAS NEW WAY TO AID PUPILS

Headmaster O'Brien of Charlestown Shows Boys How to Mend Their Own Shoes.

Headmaster Maurice J. O'Brien of the Park Street School, Charlestown, is one of the practical educators of Boston. He believes in teaching every boy and girl to mend their own shoes. He says that many boys go to school with shoes that need mending. He knows that some of these boys are from homes where the income was small and hardly enough to meet the expenses of the home. He found that many boys could not go to school because their shoes were in need of repair.

125 Kinds of Eczema

Many people suffer from eczema when they think it is some other disease. Eczema, the great authority, says that not less than 125 Latin names have been given to different forms of eczema. The one unsign is itching, and the scratching that follows aggravates and spreads the trouble. When the skin itches, apply calamine, the great authority, says that it will be healing at once, and complete recovery is often effected. Calamine excludes the air, dirt and germs, which must be kept out to promote the healing. In other skin diseases, such as eczema, pimples, blotches, rash, roughness, skin, chaffing, acne, sores, ulcers, eruptions, hives, tetts, itch, herpes, psoriasis, ringworm, etc., Calamine is equally effective in its action. AT A GLANCE: WHAT THE G. T. R. WOULD DO FOR BOSTON'S PORT

Nearly 100,000 Signatures Secured in One Week to the Petition in the AMERICAN'S Campaign to Bring Grand Trunk Pacific Terminal to This City.

THE AMERICAN'S campaign to bring the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad to Boston by popular demand was to be expected and most successful ever waged by a newspaper or any other organization. In a week a petition was circulated and nearly 100,000 signatures secured. This was a most extraordinary accomplishment. Anybody who ever tried to get a petition signed in a city of 100,000 names, but the AMERICAN, through the great army of readers, secured 100,000 signatures in a few days.

But the petition was only one of the great things performed during the week. The AMERICAN, through its readers, secured the support of the Legislature, the City Council, the Mayor, and the City of Boston. MAYORS STRONG FOR GRAND TRUNK MOVE

Better than ten thousand words this map shows what the Grand Trunk Railway would mean to Boston and why Boston must have the Grand Trunk.

The Grand Trunk would make Boston the hub of the world's commerce. The Grand Trunk spans the North American Continent, will have its own steamships from Prince Rupert to Yokohama, and is 500 miles nearer to Japan than any other North American railroad.

Study the map a moment. See what Boston ought to be. Of all the Atlantic seaports in the United States this city is nearest to Liverpool. By way of the Grand Trunk to Prince Rupert we should also be nearest to Japan.

The coming of the Grand Trunk would relieve Boston and New England from POSSIBLE oppression at the hands of a gigantic monopoly in New England transportation.

The BOSTON AMERICAN has been assured that the Grand Trunk will come to Boston "if the people want it."

Don't YOU want the Grand Trunk to come to Boston? Of course you do! Won't you sign one of the BOSTON AMERICAN petitions to bring the Grand Trunk to Boston? Of course you will! Do it today! Do it now, and get many of your neighbors to sign with you.

If we all work together we can—without expense to ourselves—do more for our New England in a very few days than has been accomplished by gentlemen who have been discussing the subject for many years. But act at once!

The law now provides that, unless a city or town establish its own lighting plants without a sale in rate of electric energy of the city or town in two successive years, it shall be deemed to have accepted a referendum. The bill leaves it to legislative wisdom whether the two successive years shall be consecutive or not. The bill allows municipal light plants to be established for a majority vote of the community, and it leaves it to the voters to decide whether they would like to establish their own lighting plants by voting out the statutory requirement for two successive years. The bill leaves it to successive years and substituting a majority vote in one year.

The bill was favorably reported by the Legislative Committee on Public Lighting, but the Public Lighting members on the committee are of the opinion that it is probable that they intend merely to show a majority vote in place of the present two successive years, provision kept on the statute books for the purpose of showing that they have not done anything to remove the law, and delay would please the public and electric light which operates in such

DISGRACE—FOR LOVE OF HIS PRETTY MODEL?

Another Stern Problem in the Fascinating, Virile Story by Robert W. Chambers, "The Common Law," Now Appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Drawn by Charles Dana Gibson.

"Querida called on them and was very agreeable and fascinating. She and Rita died with him once or twice, and he remained on his best behavior."

From the May Cosmopolitan.

LOUIS NEVILLE, known as "Kelly" to his friends, is deeply in love with Valerie West, his prettiest and most shapely model. He is a clever, successful young artist, and not so noticeably marked with the characteristics of the Bohemian as are many of his profession. Valerie had come to his studio looking for employment. She had tried the stage, but had left it, as she could not endure the life and environment. Kelly found that she possessed the qualities requisite for a model and engaged her.

In the course of their work in his studio, Kelly learns that Valerie is a girl of fine sensibilities, and their mutual culture and refinement place them almost immediately on a footing of close companionship. This gradually ripens into mutual love. Finally Kelly asks her to marry him. She declines to marry, but offers him her ringless hand, not because she loves lightly, but she loves well. She realizes that it would ruin him socially should he marry his model, and she loves him too much to bring such a condition of affairs upon her head. In many an argument, Kelly, who has never accepted her terms, tries to change her resolution and win her consent to an open betrothal, but her determination is adamant.

Kelly feels certain that if he can win his parents' approval of his marriage that he can overcome Valerie's objections, and he goes to them. While he is out of the city Valerie, who is living with her bosom friend, Rita Tevis, enjoys but two letters a day and the company of Querida, Rita and other friends of her's and Kelly's. Through the courtesy of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, we are enabled to print on this page today one of Charles Dana Gibson's delightful drawings, together with a portion of the May installment of Robert W. Chambers' fascinating artist's model story, "The Common Law," now running in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

by his father, whose father before him had left the grandfathers of these friends an legacy to his son.

It was a pallid and limited society that Henry Neville and his wife frequented—a coterie of elderly, intellectual people and their prettily dried-out offspring. And intellectual breeding was thinning it to attenuation, to a bloodless magnificence in which they, who composed it, conceived a morbid pride. Old New Yorkers all, knowing no other city, no other bourns north of Tenth street or west of Chelsea—staid, severe, fastidious people, whose drawing rooms were musty with what had once been fragrance, whose science, salutation, interests, desires were the beliefs, interests and emotions of a century ago; their colorless existence and passive amishness affronted nobody who did not come seeking affront.

So, under the circumstances, it was scarcely to be wondered at that Neville be situated to introduce the subject of Valerie West as he sat in the parlor at Splindrift House with his father and mother, poring over some ancient book of travels or looking out across the cliffs at an icy sea spluttering and glittering against a coast of frozen adamant.

At length he could remain no longer; complications awaited him in town; hunger for Valerie gnawed ceaselessly, unabated by his letters to her or by hers to him.

"Mother," he said, the evening before his departure, "would it surprise you very much if I told you that I wished to marry?"

"No," she said, tranquilly. "You mean Stephanie Swift, I suppose?"

His father glanced up over his spectacles as he beamed, then at his mother resumed his reading: "I don't mean Stephanie, mother."

His father laid aside his book and removed the thin, gold-rimmed spectacles. I understand from Lily that we are to be prepared to receive Stephanie Swift as your affianced wife," he said. "I shall be gratified. Stephen Swift was my oldest friend."

"Lily was mistaken, father. Stephanie and I are merely very good friends. I have no idea of asking her to marry me."

"I have been given to understand otherwise, Louis. I am disappointed."

Louis Neville looked out the window, considering yet conscious of the homeliness of it all.

"Who is this girl, Louis?" asked his mother, putting the white and-dill-wool shawl closer around her thin shoulders.

"Her name is Valerie West."

"One of the Wests of West Eighth street?" demanded his father.

The humor of it all twined for a moment at his son's grimly set jaws, then a slight flush mantled his face. "No, father."

"Do you mean to Chelsea Wests, Louis?"

"No."

"Then we don't know them," concluded his father, with a shrug of his shoulders, which daunted many, many times from any possibility of further discussion. But his mother's face grew troubled.

"Who is this Miss West?" she asked, in a colorless voice.

"She is a very good, very noble, very cultivated, very beautiful young girl, an orphan—who is supporting herself by her own resources."

"What?" said his father, astounded.

"Mother, I know how it sounds to you, but you and father have only to meet her to recognize in her every quality that you could possibly wish for in my wife."

"Who is she, Louis?" demanded his father, casting an eye at the evening newspaper and frowning up his temples.

"I can tell you, father."

"I beg to differ with you. Who is this girl?"

"She is a girl of business, is she actually engaged?"

The young fellow's face grew red. "She was engaged to the drama."

"Was she an actress?" he said, realizing the utter absurdity of any hope from the beginning, yet now determined to see it through to the bitter end.

"Yes, once, Louis," faltered his mother.

"Was she a singer, or like a knife by the thin edge of his father's voice. "If she was an actress, what is she now?"

"She has helped me with my painting."

"Helped you? How?"

"By posing."

You desire me to understand that the girl is an actress' model?"

"If I have stated it at him a moment ago. Then, and is that the woman you propose to have as a daughter?"

"Father," he said, hopelessly, "there is no use in saying anything. Valerie West is a very good, generous, noble, cultivated young girl, an orphan who is supporting herself by her own resources."

"Do you mean to Chelsea Wests, Louis?"

"No."

"Then we don't know them," concluded his father, with a shrug of his shoulders, which daunted many, many times from any possibility of further discussion. But his mother's face grew troubled.

"Who is this Miss West?" she asked, in a colorless voice.

"She is a very good, very noble, very cultivated, very beautiful young girl, an orphan—who is supporting herself by her own resources."

"She has helped me with my painting."

"By posing."

"You won't bring this shame on us, Louis. I know. Not on yourself, nor on the name you bear. It is an honorable name in the land, Louis. I pray God to bless you and counsel you, my son—she turned away, adding in a whisper—'and—comfort you.'"

And so he went away from Splindrift House, through a snowstorm, and arrived in New York late that evening, but not too late to call Valerie on the telephone and hear again the dear voice, with its happy little cry of greeting—and the promise of tomorrow's meeting before the day of duty should begin.

RITA never ceased to urge upon Valerie the wisdom, the absolute necessity, of self-observation in considering her future relations with Louis Neville. But, like Neville's too, Rita's rallied before the innocent simplicity of the creed which Valerie had embraced. Valerie was willing that their relations should remain indefinitely as they were in the little gods of convention were to be considered; she had the courage to sever all relations with the man she loved if anybody could convince her that it was better for Neville. Mary, too, she would not, because she believed it meant inevitable unhappiness for him. But she was not afraid to lay her ringless hands in his forever. Querida called on them and was very agreeable and fascinating, and when he went away Valerie asked him to come again. He did, and again after that. She and Rita, tired with him once or twice, and things gradually slipped back to their old footing, and Querida remained on his best behavior.

Neville had prolonged the visit to the parental roof. He did not explain to her why, but the reason was that he had made up his mind to tell his parents that he wished to marry, and to find out once and for all what their attitude would be toward such a girl as Valerie West. But he had not yet found courage to do it, and he was lingering on, trying to find it and the proper moment to employ it.

His father was a gentleman so utterly devoid of imagination that he had never even ventured into business, but had been emotionlessly content to marry and live upon an income sufficient to maintain the material and intellectual traditions of the house of Neville.

Tall, transparently pale, negative in character, he had made it a life object to get through life without increasing the number of his acquaintances—legacies in the second generation left him

ASSORTED HEART THROBS

DEAR AUNT DOTTY—I'm a steady working young man and have fallen madly in love with a most charming girl who is a ballet dancer. I am sure she returns my love, and as I am anxious to find a wife who will make a home and care for me, do you think I had better marry this girl? JONAS FLOODINGTON.

Believe me, Jonas, if you had given this ballet dancer anything most love she would never have returned it. No, I do not advise you to marry her, not because of suspicions to ballet dancers, but because a high kisser is very apt to make a low cooker.

DEAR AUNT DOTTY—I have been unable to secure the "Language of Flowers." Will you please inform me? PENFLOVE PENKINGTON.

Here it is, Penelope:
Rose—"Love is expensive."
Violet—"You're a sweet bunch."
Pansy—"You've got another think."
Primrose—"Take a walk down the path."
Lavender—"Forgetfulness" (of No. 1).
Chrysanthemum—"Hello, Willie."
Forget-me-not—"What is your name?"
Golden Rod—"I adore millionaires."
Bluebell—"Hello, Central."

DEAR AUNT DOTTY—I have a perfect peach of a young man just from college. He has heaps of money, but is not as generous as I could wish. Please advise best method to make him loosen up. SUE BRETTE.

Read May Irwin's celebrated book, "Twenty-three Ways to Do a Lobster."

DEAR AUNT DOTTY—I love a man in Kalamazoo whom I have never seen. He is coming to the city to see me. What would be the proper course? I enclose photograph. FANNY PRUNNYTZ.

Thanks for photo, Fanny. Do not let him see you first.

DEAR AUNT DOTTY—I recently married a millionaire and we are living in a swell apartment house, but the people think because I was a ticket taker in a dime museum I am not in their set and they will not recognize me. How will I secure recognition in the swell families in this block? MRS. MARIE DE PLUX.

You can have them all calling on you inside a week if you will divorce your husband and marry the janitor.

DEAR AUNT DOTTY—I am in love with a young man who lives out of town. The other night when he called on me he missed his last train and mother invited him to stay all night. Now he has married mother. What do you say to that? MARY WEED.

There is nothing to say, Mary.

Say, What's the Difference Between---? A Chance to Help Two Popular Stage People Out of an Embarrassing Predicament

HARRY DAVENPORT, the man who plays the unlucky bachelor in "The Commuters," and gets into trouble with his married chum, is a regular cut-up off the stage, and is always springing new stories and jokes. The other day he met Miss Florence Malone, the young wife in "The Commuters," and said to her:

"Oh, by the way, I've got a conundrum to tell you."
 "Mercy!" exclaimed Miss Malone. "Let's have it, for this is a cruel world, and everything comes so high that we poor actors can't afford to get a laugh whenever there is one handy. Is it good?"

"Well, then," said Davenport, "here it is:

"WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A COMMUTER STANDING ON TREMONT STREET AT 10 O'CLOCK ON A RAINY NIGHT AND A PRETTY GIRL WITH A HOBBLE SKIRT?"

"I should think," answered Miss Malone, "there was considerable difference, but I can't just think what the answer is. Let's have it. I know whereupon she burst into anticipatory laughter, as the photograph shows. But right here something happened. Harry Davenport forgot the answer! A pretty predicament! Poor Miss Malone can't stand here to that conundrum. She has other engagements to fill. Mr. Davenport can't spare all his time to remember it. Can't somebody help the unfortunate couple out?"

The City Life Section offers inducements. The answer being lost forever, a new one must be found. A prize of $10 will be awarded to the person inventing the best answer to this riddle, $5 for the third best and $2 for the fourth best. Think up a new answer to the riddle.

What is the difference between a commuter standing on Tremont street at 10 o'clock on a rainy night and a pretty girl with a hobble skirt?

BEAUTY HINTS

SUMMER is approaching and the young ladies throughout our broad land are planning their Summer campaigns. Naturally (or artificially), they must be beautiful. My beauty department queries are coming in by the score on every mail. Here are a few replies to those who appear most in need of my invaluable advice.

SHADY SADIE—No, you are mistaken, you cannot hope to bleach your complexion this Summer by sitting in the bieschere at the ball games. A good bleach is made from white wash. Women as well as politicians have been known to need this.

MISS LAKLOX—Your trouble is a common one, hair has a habit of getting thin, both from wear and hanging about on one's dresser. Secure a very fine needle and a bicycle pump. Pierce the end of each hair and blow it up to the desired plumpness with the bicycle pump, then tie the end of the hair in a knot. If you are careful not to puncture the hair, the result will be quite chic and bizarre.

MISS HAFBAIR—Of course it is too late now, but your mother should have had you vaccinated, well, elsewhere, for instance. Ribbons will not always stay in place. Why not have your monogram tattooed on the vaccination mark to divert attention?

BLANCHE—No, I know of no brand that will not rub off. If he wears a dark coat avoid laying your cheek against his shoulder.

IMOGENE—Why spend $6 or $5 for a manure set when one can make a very attractive little set for the dresser by picking up stray implements about the home. Take 1 pair wire cutters, 2 rasps, 1 sheet sand paper, 1 screw driver, 1 ice pick. Gild these, tie ribbons on them and put them on a tea tray on your dresser. They will make an unusual and dainty set.

AURA GROSS—No, of course you cannot gin your ears back. Wear a veil around them when out of doors and they will not flap. Wear heavy earrings as home and weight them down.

MRS. DASHER—I doubt very much if the matter of the harem skirt should come in the beauty department. However it is a matter for much discussion, of which I have little room in these priceless columns. And again, there is a "divided" opinion in this matter.

Grin's Modern Fairy Tales

breaking in all the land.

Little Three-Eyes was so called because in addition to two ordinary eyes she had a strawberry mark in the centre of her forehead that flashed and flushed like the aureole, heralding all her acquaintances nicknamed her "Little Three-Eyes."

Now One-Eye and Three-Eyes were very plain maids. In fact, had it been that their Mother was extremely wealthy, they would have been called ugly. As it was they were considered to be "magnificent" which was as much as a Y. M. C. could say.

But Little Two-Eyes, as Mark Antony first said of Cleopatra, was a beauty. Yet all was not happiness for her. Her Mother had explained to her over and over again that as gods had blessed her with beauty, she must share. All the Mother's wealth was to be used between Little One-Eye and Little Three-Eyes as a sort of compensation.

Little Two-Eyes used to gaze thoughtfully at an old picture of her Mother and say to herself, "I wish I could be like the gods who gave me beauty. What a life! But still, thinking of her sisters, she was well satisfied."

Now Little Two-Eyes had many admirers but they were always far away from her as soon as they called, because her Mother used to explain to them that all her money was to go to One-Eye and Three-Eyes.

"What a life!" Little Two-Eyes, her Mother used to say, "and you are so young and beautiful, while my other daughters will have abundant wealth."

This was certainly a jolt to the ardent lovers of Little Two-Eyes, who realized that good looks will buy no red ink, and so they transferred their affections from Little Two-Eyes' beautiful face to the more attractive gold certificates that went with Little One-Eye and Little Three-Eyes, something after the manner of giving twenty roubles with one-cent coins.

Finally the Mother died and it was found she had kept her word. Little Two-Eyes received half a dozen silver spoons that were too old to be stylish and not old enough to be valuable as heirlooms. All the remainder of her Mother's fortune, which amounted to a couple of millions, was equally divided between Little One-Eye and Little Three-Eyes.

One would think these sisters would have been generous and made a splendid home for Little Two-Eyes, but as far as this story goes she has another thing. Little One-Eye and Little Three-Eyes were extremely jealous of Little Two-Eyes, for despite their great wealth, the young men paying court to them would look longingly at Little Two-Eyes, so they tied her to their spoons up in an old doll's eye, handed them to her together with her hat and said "What's your hurry?"

"Dinny, the whole walk is covered with gravel and dirt, and, in my estimation, it's a bad job."

Dinny looked at him to surprise for a moment, and replied:

"Share, Doc, there's really a bad job of yours covered with gravel and dirt."

DINNY was in church one Sunday. When the contribution box was passed, he said:

glance through this first chapter of "A Successful Wife." It is short. It is real. It is human. No "fine writing." It doesn't seem like fiction, because it is so simple, so direct. It is the romance and mystery of everyday life—the most wonderful and fascinating romance of all. It is all action and significance.

A SUCCESSFUL WIFE

CHAPTER I.

My father died when I was fifteen years old, and my mother, then ailing with the same malady, found herself dependent upon me, the eldest of her five children. The day of father's funeral the smallest child stayed at home with mother, and they sat waiting for us at the window when we came home. It was Spring, and even though I was sad I noticed the dandelions spotting the lawn like yellow stars.

Our house was a small wooden one, the yard only a few feet wide, and the neighbors could look in through our windows.

That night, when the children were in bed, mother and I sat talking in her room, and it seemed as though she couldn't live the week out—she coughed after every few sentences. Around her shoulders, over her night-dress, she wore a gray shawl. Her eyes were beautiful and clear.

"It is going to be hard for you, Esther," she said to me.

We were not a family of sentimentalists, but I think I said to mother then about the words she wanted to hear, though they weren't immortal or clever.

"Oh, we'll get along all right. We don't owe any money."

I asked her if she had enough covering, and whether she wished powders to make her sleep, and she called me to her and gave me a kiss. Then she began to cough dreadfully.

I sat upstairs in my bedroom for quite a while looking at "ads" in the paper. I noticed this:

"WANTED—A young girl to learn typewriting. Wall Street. Salary paid to beginner."

The next day I went to New York and applied. They engaged me at five dollars a week. We had enough money left from father's bank account to pay the funeral expenses and buy me a commutation ticket, and the house rent had been paid for us by an uncle in the South for the last few years. This left me clear twenty dollars a month to feed and clothe six of us.

My remembrance of any tragedy in the situation isn't clear. There was never a moment of despair in our household. The people liked mother in Brackettsville. Nobody bothered us for money, and we lived for a year on kindness in the town and what I made. Then Fanny joined me in my daily pilgrimage to and from New York, starting in just as I had—at five per week, and I was raised the next year to ten dollars.

Together we fed and clothed and educated the boys. None of us were imaginative, so we were spared cooking up the miseries and worries that cleverer people make for themselves. We never saw anything "picturesque" or "dreadful" in our fight for life, and I never heard a complaint at home. I don't recall a wish expressed that was beyond the gratification of our means. Perhaps we were without hearts. Perhaps we were too proud. Perhaps "way down in us" were springs which years of need and care and repression had never suffered to be uncovered; perhaps that crust kept the waters still and deep. I do not know.

We had simple pleasures, and I amny took them; I was too tired, for many years my midday lunch in New York cost me ten cents a day no more. I was underfed and overworked. I went to bed right after dinner. Parties in Brackettsville didn't tempt me out, but Fanny loved to dance, and she had a party-dress and a pair of thin shoes.

Two years after father, mother died. I cannot write about it.

I went to the city the day after the funeral, and at 4 o'clock fainted at my machine. I don't believe I shed a single tear at the house. I felt as though the world were one big burden tied to my shoulders, and I gave way under it. I guess fainting is another sign of tears. When I came to I heard the office boy say to a girl they had called in from the next office: "Her mother was buried yesterday, and she was too proud to ask for more than one day off."

There is no reason why I, of all others in the wide world, should write the "annals of a life," unless it may be that in some way or other they may serve to encourage a woman here and there. Perhaps some woman with little education and a great deal of timidity may be interested in my life.

I don't think there is a creature living who would not love to see "successful," and who isn't ready to spend twenty-five cents or even twenty-five dollars on a book which would tell them "how to succeed." You hear such a lot of talk nowadays about success! I don't pretend to write such a book. But looking at the opening of my life in the small Brackettsville house, when five of us stood around mother's coffin, with only me to support the family—when I contrast that picture with to-day I suppose people would say that I have made a success. In this case, it is what I have to tell can give any woman or any wife courage—why, then, the pages are worth while!

English High School and Exeter Academy Carry Off First Place Honors in Two Big Events on Franklin Field

Penn. Cornell and Chicago Split Even in Championship Races; 20,000 Turn Out to Witness the Great Athletic Meet.

PHILADELPHIA, April 29.—Pennsylvania and Chicago met at Franklin Field this afternoon for the first of two days of the annual meet of the Eastern Athletic Union. The contest was a grand success, and the English High School and Exeter Academy carried off the first place honors in two big events on Franklin Field.

Baseball in Rome

SEEMS to me" and R. Elements, "we have seen of blood a plenty.
I for an am sick of carnage and a sick upon
Was a boy hit from brother first one leg and this (about it)
I know off you find and ever on this ghastly play

RHILLTO, had," said Old Hebebert, braver than the rest, said
"I would find certain some pasture prairie than this place is thick last night my cousin Brutus had a score, ran all through his eyes, and will never more be clear of his own wicked life."

THEN they talked, and all assented, till it was time to go to bed.
A week among their army and a camp to change right
And Xuz Yuma was chosen, with his way to store him from to become arbitrator till old age impaired his sight

But at once he set them playing, though he had no thought of staying
But of course became a rout—so he did, upon my soul

Old Xuz Yuma was awful, and a lion had a new fall
This is better far than burning as a torch upon a pole.

No-Rim-Cut Tires

Tires 10 per cent oversize—tires which can't rim-cut —tires used by 64 motor car makers

Do you know that Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires have become the sensation among men who know? Last year our tire sales increased 200%. This year 64 makers of motor cars have contracted for these tires. Over half a million have already been sold—enough to equip 125,000 cars. Don't you wish to know why these patented tires have jumped into such popularity?

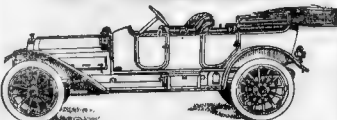

A 25% Saving
The fact that these tires can't rim-cut saves the average motorist 25%. For rim-cutting ruins most automobile tires than any other single cause. To run on a flat tire for even a block may wreck it beyond repair.

Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires—controlled by our patents—get rid of this trouble forever. We have run them flat as far as 20 miles. They simply can't be rim-cut.

Ford construction

The FORD Model T is the only motor car in which the weight is pressed before the prospective buyer as a merit and advantage. We boast of the light weight of the Ford and prove, that because of this light weight, it is the most economical car in operation in the world, regardless of size.

Here is a four-cylinder car that will carry its load of five passengers from 21 to 25 miles on one gallon of gasoline, from 5,000 to 10,000 miles on one set of tires. A car with a string of records (speed tests, endurance runs, continuous heavy service), that crosses the continent, showing an annual service of from 10,000 to 20,000 miles, and an annual up-keep expense that is simply a trifle.

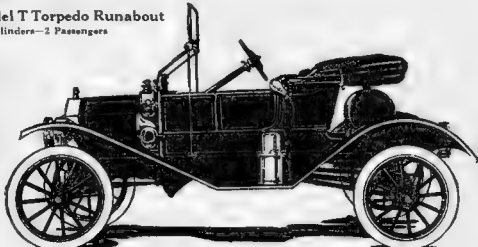

When you buy a motor car it is well to be assured beforehand what the expense of up-keep will be, and FORD Model T coaxes your closest investigation.

The weight of FORD Model T (about 1,200 pounds), is just about half the weight of other 5-passenger touring cars. The light weight construction of the Ford is due to the use of Vanadium steel (Vanadium, an alloy, mixed with the molten steel, increases the stress of the best carbon steel 85 tons to the square inch. Besides, it gives to the molecule of the steel a sort of fibre, which, while adding enormously to the strength, prevents crystallization under vibration.) Just ask the other fellows why they don't use Vanadium steel!

With Full Equipment, 21 to 25 miles on one gallon of gasoline, 5,000 to 10,000 miles on one set of tires. A car with a string of records (speed tests, endurance runs, continuous heavy service), that crosses the continent, showing an annual service of from 10,000 to 20,000 miles, and an annual up-keep expense that is simply a trifle.

In fact, the day is not far distant when Vanadium steel will be a necessity when a motor car that is not constructed entirely of Vanadium steel will be ruled off the market. The Vanadium steel construction of FORD Model T gives it a superiority in actual worth as great as exists between all wood fabric and all cotton fabric.

The responsibilities resting upon a 5-passenger touring car demand the utmost of strength in construction for the safety of the passengers, and the utmost in strength of construction is not possible without the use of Vanadium steel, which is at once the strongest as well as the most expensive steel made.

The light weight FORD Model T covers the most difficult, the most wretched roads—mud, sand, slush, snow, rocks, ruts, hills, fields—safely and with comparative ease because of its light weight construction and liberal road clearance. It runs on the top where the heavier car sinks. You can see the common sense of this, and you will see it more when you compare the FORD Model T with any other motor car.

Come, compare! let the salesman explain the many superior merits of the Ford over all other cars, regardless of size, capacity or price. The FORD Model T is in a class by itself, and this is one reason why every fifth car sold in this country to-day is a FORD Model T. This is one reason why there are over 75,000 Ford Cars in active service to-day.

MRS. DODGE'S OWN VERDICT OF BAFELING MYSERY Woman Accused in Vermont Death Case Tells the American She Is Guiltless and Will Go Free

Four Characteristic Expressions of Mrs. Dodge. Specially Posed for Staff Photographer R. W. Sears of the AMERICAN

Lunenburg Woman, in Whose House Tragedy Occurred Last September, Is the Third Woman in History of Green Mountain State to Face Trial for Crime, Penalty for Which Means Her Own Life by Hanging

GUTHRIE, Vt., April 29.—On the eve of being placed on trial in the Vermont state prison for the murder, the penalty for which may be hanging, Mrs. Phoebe M. Dodge, a woman of wealth and social prominence of Lunenburg, talked of the tragedy at her home last September when William Heath was shot in the back and killed.

This is the first time Mrs. Dodge has been interviewed, and she told a reporter of the Sunday AMERICAN the same story that she will tell on the witness stand when she is called to testify in her own behalf.

The attractive, stout featured widow declared in positive language that she did not shoot Heath and that she does not know who did. She said that she was the victim of circumstances—that she was the only one known to be in the house with Heath at the time he was killed.

The woman, some 50 years of age, the widow of a prominent citizen, the document has rendered make the trial one of the most interesting and exciting—end of that Mrs. Mary Rogers, who was condemned and hanged.

"I DID NOT KILL WILLIAM HEATH."

"I am guiltless," said Mrs. Dodge. "I did not shoot Mr. Heath. I had nothing to do with his death. I verily believe that my case will be decided by right, good men and in accordance with the truth."

"I was in the kitchen with room between Mr. Heath and myself when I heard the shots."

"I happened to be in the house alone. This was unfortunate for me. If some one had only been there with me, I would not have been subjected to this trying ordeal."

"Indeed, it has been most humiliating. But I know my innocence. Because I am innocent of this terrible crime I charge against me I expect to be acquitted."

Mrs. Dodge is now at the home of Colonel Porter H. Dale, one of the wealthiest and most prominent citizens in this section of the State. Colonel Dale will assist in the defense of the Lunenburg woman in her trial, which begins Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Dodge has been the guest of Colonel Dale for some time. In the quiet of the mansion, which almost towers the mountain hill in the center of the town, she has been able to enjoy to the full the little home pursuits at which she is an adept—sewing, housework and family work. She is a great reader, and has the advantage of the Colonel's library, which occupies an entire wing to the Dale home. Moreover, her presence here gives her an opportunity for frequent conferences with her counsel, Henry Woodgate of St. Johnsbury, Harland B. Howe, of Haver, and William H. Howe, of Colchester.

ACCUSED WOMAN IN SECLUSION.

Mrs. Dodge has been living in seclusion, and none but her lawyers knew she was here. Tonight she consented to an interview. To a Sunday AMERICAN reporter she spoke interestingly of her daily routine of work and recreation. She discussed current topics, touching on woman's suffrage, a topic on which she holds some ideas of her own. She doesn't think much of the suffragists.

"Woman's place is in the home," said Mrs. Dodge. "I have little or no sympathy for the woman's suffragists. Women don't need the vote to fulfill their duties in life. Womanhood is the best part of woman. And certainly no one, not even the suffragist, will claim that a woman can become any more womanly through becoming a voter. One had as well claim that being a voter makes a man more manly."

The greater education of American girls is still another thesis that Mrs. Dodge has studied. Her ideas regarding child are home-made, she declares.

"Every woman should know how to cook," said Mrs. Dodge. "This is essential to home-making. A good cook can go a long way toward bringing about true happiness. Every girl should be taught how to keep house. That is another essential. It is the duty of every mother to train her daughters in the home."

Mrs. Dodge then referred to her own life, for she was early taught how to keep house by her mother. She has never regretted the training she got in her home, and it has proven a valuable asset to her, she thinks. Her son, in 1887, she has known what it was to work hard. With her husband, the late J. Marshall Dodge, prominent man of affairs in Essex County in his day, she planned and worked. As a result, their union was a happy one and they prospered.

As she spoke of the several subjects that casually edged their way into the conversation, Mrs. Dodge revealed an intimate knowledge of things and events with which one would have hardly expected her to be so well acquainted. She discussed her books with the zest of a lover of good literature, for she has read much. She described her work with the enthusiasm of one who knows how to do it and get the best advantage.

Mrs. Dodge is a striking figure. At first glance there is that something in her appearance which calls up the word unusual for a descriptive purpose. Her eyes are erect; the complexion is immediately receptive that she is far from being obtrusive. She seems retiring and mild-mannered. Throughout her talk with the AMERICAN reporter a certain characteristic reserve was apparent. And yet, somehow the impression grows on one that here is a woman of deep feeling, a woman possibly of vast temperament; a woman whose habits of life have meant a repression of some strong trait of character.

Mrs. Dodge isn't striking because of her wealth. She is only about 5 feet 6

LOOK OUT FOR YOUR DEFECTS

Fault Finding Soon Becomes a Habit and Very Easily Becomes a Vice—The Best and Most Profitable Subject for Criticism Is One's Self.

they did not know before, and their small souls can scarcely contain their respect and admiration for him. Useful criticism is all ways appreciated.

Particularly vicious is that habit of criticism which is forever finding flaws that cannot be corrected. The dramatic critic who makes fun of the appearance of an actor, of the length of his nose or chin, of some trick of speech that is not to be eradicated, is simply needlessly cruel; he is not a critic at all. The man who laughs at the ungrammatical speech of another man who has never had the opportunity to learn to speak correctly, or at the foreigner who can no more change his accent than he can change the imprint of his nationality that may be stamped upon his face—such people ought to be made to feel that they are as foolish and unwelcome as the boy who throws stones at every passing stranger. In most European countries a stranger may speak the language never so badly and he will not be laughed at. In this respect the countries of the Old World have something to teach Americans.

Criticism for its own sake never helps anybody. When the great science of teaching becomes recognized as it deserves to be recognized there will be no instruction by finding fault. Teachers will never be permitted to irritate and antagonize their pupils by nagging or by sarcastic references to stupidity that is often the result of some physical defect.

Punishment such as "keeping after school," which wrongfully increases a child's already long school hours, and public humiliations before other members of a class will be abolished and every mistake will be criticized constructively; every pupil who falls into one will be taught how next time to avoid it.

Could such a system be introduced to-day the work that now takes two years could be done in one, and the things that children are taught would be far more firmly impressed on their minds than they are at present. To bring about such a condition of affairs will take many years of patience; for teachers to-day are underpaid, their services are undervalued and instead of being encouraged to do their best work they are continually harassed by the fear that they will lose their places and too often bullied by corrupt and fault-finding principals, school superintendents and members of school boards. But when such a time comes, as it will, one of the first ideas imparted will be the conviction that self-criticism is important and that the criticism of others is wasted time.

There are those in the world whose business is to criticize, and who to earn their livings must look out for defects in others. The foreman in charge of a gang of men, the superintendent to whom many foremen report, the manager who is responsible for the work of the superintendent, all must in turn be critical, for they will be judged by the mistakes that other men make.

To such people the business of fault-finding is hard enough. Few there are who would not rather find merit than defects. The man who employs large numbers of men would naturally rather secure efficient employees than inefficient ones, for the plain selfish reason that he makes more profit out of the efficient men. When he has to find fault he does it reluctantly, and counts it one of the greatest among the many disagreeable things that come with control over others.

This being true, why should men and women, under no necessity of finding fault with others, but under a very great necessity of finding fault with themselves, continue to look for defects in others? We confess that this is a question we cannot answer. Speculation and meditation alike reveal no explanation. It must be put down to "human nature," that curious affair which accounts for all the good there is in the world as well as all the bad, and which all the scholars and philosophers ever born have not been able to analyze.

John Smith, the commuter, moves into the country for the benefit of his children's health and establishes a little garden patch for his own amusement and exercise.

John Brown, who lives in the country and has always lived there, sees Smith at work in his garden. Neglectful of the weeds in his own yard, he comes and leans on Smith's fence, and tells him and informs him that he is doing everything wrong.

Smith asks Brown how things ought to be done, and Brown tries to tell him. But Smith notices Brown's own garden is going to the dogs, and he does not set much value by the criticism.

Mrs. Brown, who has always lived in the country, sees the Smith children dressed in city clothes and criticizes them and the way they are brought up. Mrs. Smith sees the Brown children, accounts them a parcel of future country boys and finds fault with them and with their mother's idea of child rearing.

Brown, of course, by directing his criticism to himself might have had a tidy and profitable little garden. Mrs. Brown might have learned something about children from Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Smith might have learned something on the same complicated subject from Mrs. Brown.

But the whole party is engaged, each in criticizing the other, and the profit that results is always on the wrong side of the mental ledger.

Brother and sister, mother and child, man and wife, can always gain by self-criticism. The husband who is continually complaining that he is misunderstood and abused presently comes to be such a terrible creature that he deserves the persecutions that he fancies he suffers from.

Often the wife who imagines that her husband is not doing enough for her could secure all the attention she craves by considering her own difficulties a little less and her husband's a little more.

Sometimes the mother who thinks that her child does not appreciate the sacrifices she has made for him could by making a few less sacrifices do more to keep from building up selfishness in him and incidentally make her own load easier to bear. And the boy—well, no boy ever thinks a tenth part enough about his mother and the debt he owes her—and it is not likely ever will.

Fault-finding may make a splendid habit—if directed only thus, it will correct vices, give him a TO Corsets $3 & $5. the thousand the race will get him a

Copyright, 1911, by the Sunday American-Journal-Kammler.

HEREVER men are gathered together you will find them finding fault with other men. Women meet in sewing societies and at bridge parties and criticize other women. Reformers get together at public meetings and point out the vices and faults of others. Even ministers, whose trade it is to be charitable, are often more inclined to rail at the mote that is in the eye of other men than to take thought for the beam that may happen to be in their own. The human race seems to consist largely of careful hunters for defects in other people.

Now intelligent criticism, as everybody knows, is both useful and necessary. Life consists of a series of experiments. Everything that is to be accomplished must be done over and over again before it can be done right. Those who, out of their wisdom and experience, can point out to the beginner or the bungler his mistakes are of great value—PROVIDED THAT THEY ALSO CAN MAKE CLEAR THE WAY. THAT THE MISTAKES CAN BE CORRECTED.

Unfortunately most criticism is destructive instead of constructive. The critic of the drama announces that an actor is a bad actor, or that a play is a bad play. He does not tell the actor how to become a good actor; he does not explain to the author of the bad play how he may write a good play.

In most cases he is neither an actor nor a playwright, and is quite as much interested in calling attention to his brilliancy as a writer as he is in crying down the performance he has just witnessed.

The critics of art and of literature write on much the same principle. The men who criticized the work of Kipling when he first began to write did not tell him how to write better; they merely solemnly declared that he did not know how to write at all, and that he had better go back to India and stay there. They were astonished when a year or two later they discovered that Kipling did know how to write, and that they did not know how to criticize.

Mark Twain, when he first began to write books and newspaper articles, was made fun of by many learned gentlemen hailing from Boston, who said that he knew nothing of English, that he was merely a literary clown, and that as soon as the curiosity aroused by his freak writings had subsided he would pass into oblivion.

Mark Twain will be remembered as long as Americans live and read. There is no one living to-day who can remember a single sentence written by a single one of his critics.

It is so easy to find fault. The old man coming home from a walk in the park watches two small boys playing marbles in the gutter. He observes that one of the boys does not shoot straight, and pauses to inform him that he had better mend his aim if he hopes to win any marbles. The boy says something disrespectful and continues to do the best he can. He knows that the old man could not shoot at all and that his criticism is merely the idle expression of a fault-finding nature.

But let a man come along who really knows how to play marbles; let him kneel there in the dust or mud of the gutter and teach these youngsters something about shooting which

COMING EVENTS TO ENTERTAIN SOCIETY

THE season when fashion takes its last gay fling at the city is about to begin. The coming events to entertain society are numerous and varied. The most prominent of these are the annual dinner of the Boston Club, the annual dinner of the National Association of Women's Clubs, and the annual dinner of the Boston Society of Music. The Boston Club dinner is a grand affair, with a large attendance and a program of entertainment. The National Association of Women's Clubs dinner is also a significant event, with a focus on social and charitable work. The Boston Society of Music dinner is a more intimate affair, with a focus on musical performances. There are also many smaller events, such as lectures, concerts, and social gatherings. The coming season is a time of great activity and excitement for the city's social and cultural life. The events are well-attended and are a source of pride for the community. The coming season is a testament to the power of women's organizations and the importance of social and charitable work. The events are a testament to the hard work and dedication of the organizers and are a source of pride for the entire community. The coming season is a time of great activity and excitement for the city's social and cultural life.

Not one of these women ever received compensation in any form for the use of their names in this advertisement—but are willing that we should refer to them because of the good they may do other suffering women to prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a reliable and honest medicine, and that the statements made in our advertisements regarding its merit are the truth and nothing but the truth.

An Exposition of The Wonderful Results

Nemo Week for 1911 is an event of vast importance to millions of women, for it marks the completion of the most remarkable line of corsets ever produced—the new Nemo Lastikops Corset System. Since our "Innovation Sale," in January, we have made constant additions to this System, and now show a complete variety of models for women of EVERY FIGURE, from very SLENDER to EXTRA-STOUT.

These Are THE MOST PERFECT CORSETS Ever Offered

Nemo Corsets have always been in a class alone, and now the marvelous results attained by the use of our semi-elastic Lastikops Webbing place Nemo so far above and beyond all ordinary corsets that competition has been actually eliminated.

All Imitations of Nemo are Worthless

All attempted imitations of Nemo Corsets have failed, because the special Nemo functions are performed by our own patented inventions and cannot possibly be performed without them.

Nemo imitations can be sold ONLY to women who MISTAKE them for the GENUINE Nemo.

Don't Be Deceived!

For several years, certain unscrupulous manufacturers have been trying to introduce imitations of the Nemo Corset at the same price as ours, and some of them have succeeded in doing so. But we have a way of detecting them. The Nemo Corset is made of a material which is different in every other respect, and has no relation whatever to our patented hygienic features. These attempts have been utterly failed. The public has refused to be deceived.

Some of these imitations have been forced to the expedient of cheapening their corsets as well as their prices. You can now buy the cheap imitations of the Nemo Self-Reducing Corset, with which the market is flooded, at almost any price.

We WARN THE PUBLIC not to be deceived by any similar-sounding name nor by self-evident adaptations of our trademark, price, methods and advertising. Avoid these carefully prepared traps, and do not be led to believe that you can buy, at an out-price, either the genuine Nemo Corset or the value it represents.

Produced by the Use of Lastikops Webbing

LASTIKOPS WEBBING is the ONLY elastic fabric ever made that DOES NOT LOSE ITS ELASTICITY. We guarantee it to wear as long as the corset. It is our own patented invention, used ONLY in Nemo Corsets. It enables us to assure you greater figure-reduction than can be produced by any other corsets—and this with a delightful sense of comfort and complete hygienic safety.

Nemos Outwear All Other Corsets Because They Represent Twice as Much Actual Value in Material and Making—and You Pay Nothing Extra for the Nemo Special Features and Service.

Now is the time to study the Nemo Corset Specialties and COMPARE them with all ordinary corsets. This is a duty which every woman owes to herself, for the CORSET has become the most important article in a woman's attire, and comparison will quickly show that there's NO SUBSTITUTE for the Nemo—none that can give Nemo service.

Nemo Corsets Are Sold Everywhere

Go to your favorite dealer this week, and be carefully fitted in the Nemo that suits your figure. But be sure that it's a NEMO!

JESS DANDY WINS TITLE AS LONG DISTANCE RECTOR OF AMERICAN STAGEDOM

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

JESS DANDY has had his twenty-fourth birthday performance of "The Prince of the Theatre" last Thursday evening. It was an impressive one, and he was crowned with the title of "The Prince of the Theatre" as a result of his performance.

And we have to be willing to go right on, he confesses to his five thousand admirers, "I am a long distance rector of American stagedom. I am a long distance rector of American stagedom. I am a long distance rector of American stagedom."

Two David Warfield, after a few years with "The Music Master," succeeded in getting an inferior place because he could stand the grueling work of a long distance rector. He was a long distance rector of American stagedom. He was a long distance rector of American stagedom. He was a long distance rector of American stagedom.

"Many funny things happen to us on the road that at the time we are a bit annoyed, but which in memory always pull a good laugh. Only two weeks ago, I was in a hotel in New York. I was in a hotel in New York. I was in a hotel in New York."

For a week that was made up largely of plays that have turned here and there, the last six days at the theatre have been more than ordinarily cheerful. Boston has never been looked upon as a particularly attractive village for "repeats," although you might find several examples to show that the general opinion in that respect among theatrical men requires teaching.

Of course, Boston is not a hot weather town, theatrically, as all the theatre discover every day. It is a hot weather town, theatrically, as all the theatre discover every day. It is a hot weather town, theatrically, as all the theatre discover every day.

From Palace to Prison—A Plunger's Progress

How Young
Ralph Brandreth,
Whose Father
Made a Fortune
in Pills,
Plunged Into a Belgian Jail Via
the New York
Gay White
Way

Mrs. Ralph Brandreth, Jr., Wife of the Plunger. They Were Both Seriously Injured in an Auto Accident While Engaged, and Were Married on Their Sick-beds in the Hospital.

RALPH BRANDRETH, SR., the pill manufacturer, of Oshung, N. Y., made a lot of pills in his time. Out of the pills he made a great fortune and a great name. The name used to be everywhere—on barns and scenery and waterfalls, rocks and roadsides and live stock. Only the rising generation will not remember it and its variegated advertisements, mangled now, alas, as is the way in life, by other pills and the hopeful finger that points ever upward.

To the house of Brandreth, rising or falling ever higher on the foundation of pills, came, in due course, an heir—Ralph, Jr. And he, not pills, is or are the hero of "The Plunger."

For, though passed for years the stigma that haunted the glory of the Brandreth pill upon the plains of Trebond, as on the icy Greenland rill, Ralph, Jr., has taken their place.

Ralph's life began in Sing Sing—the village, not the prison—and at certain stages of his career it has looked as though it might end there—the prison, not the village.

The name of Brandreth was always ready money to Ralph, and he had but to whisper the magic word, "Pills," to win his way anywhere.

At the time of his father's death, six years ago, Ralph had spent over $15,000 on the Florida sestet, another $25,000 on other Broadway beauties, about $20,000 on fast automobiles, and nearly a quarter of a million in other plunging ways.

One day, while sauntering along the New York wharves, he suddenly conceived the idea that he would like to make a trip to the tropics. At the pier lay the Taormina (Panama's fleet) commanded by Captain Lovelace (Panama's Admiral), and manned by a crew of twenty-four (Panama's navy).

"I want to sign with you, Can," said Ralph to the Captain, whom he found on the bridge.

"Well," replied the Captain, "all I need is a cook. Can you cook?"

"Surest thing you know!" And Ralph signed.

He had a big roll with him when he started, and it was a simple matter for him to fee his assistant cook, a negro, to do all the work, while he spent his time and his money like only he could with the Captain and the crew.

But the fun didn't really start till the warship reached Colon.

"Any more booked for the next week or so, Captain?" asked Ralph, as soon as they reached port.

"Well," said the Captain, "there doesn't seem to be anything for the next seven days. What do you want?"

"Why," said Ralph, "I'm going to borrow the navy for awhile, that's all."

Ralph borrowed the navy. For four weeks he cruised the waters of the Caribbean Sea, only touching at port to change passengers and ship additional supplies. Then he resumed his Gay White Way Career.

Bitter Pill for Loving Mother.

"Ralph," said his mother one day when the pace got hotter than she could stand, "how would you like a playboy cruise around the world?"

"The very thing," replied Ralph, always looking for excitement.

The eighty-foot yacht, Taormina, was at the pier for the purpose and was fitted up at a total expense of $35,000.

Captain Lovelace happened to be in port at the time and readily consented to join Ralph in the expedition, as did a German professor and an English doctor, and an American sailor. On board was a supply of wine, etc., sufficient to stave a Republic for a year; and enough ammunition to supply the South American republics for a dozen wars.

Just out of the Narrows, the Taormina was hailed up by a United States revenue cutter.

"We understand you are on a filibustering expedition. You will have to turn back," explained the revenue officer.

"No," replied Brandreth, "you are entirely wrong. These few pounds of ammunition that we carry are to protect us against the wild tribes of the South Sea Islands. Of course, you know who I am?"

"Who are you, anyway?"

"Why, I'm Brandreth—Brandreth's pills, you know?" They let him go.

$75,000 in Pills for Davy Jones.

Every mile or so, Sandy Hook, in dirty weather, the Taormina collided with a four-master. It was a terrible crash. It looked as if the little yacht must surely sink.

The four-master stood by to give assistance. From his cabin came young Brandreth with a revolver in his hand. Without a moment's hesitation he let fly at the four-master.

"Turn you," yelled the captain of the four-master. "If that's what you're going to do, you can sink to the bottom," and off he sailed.

Before the Taormina did sink, however, a wrecking tug bore in sight and towed it into port.

A few months later another start was made. Off Norfolk, Va., the vessel came to grief again, and this time, what with salvage claims and other bills that were filed against it, it was put up at public auction and brought exactly $200.

Thus ended the seavoyage cruise. The boat had been at sea just six days and the expedition had cost a nation of $75,000.

Back to New York and his Gay White Way came Brandreth. A great French touring car, which cost $5,000, an ex-live suite in the drawing, with two Jan butlers, and the magic of the name Brandreth, allowed him to live the life for two months or more.

Then, without any warning, he left for Jamaica, in the West Indies, where, for $5,000, which he obtained from his mother, he purchased Murtleth Castle on Montego Bay, and stated that he intended to become a planter.

One day the Sheriff showed up at the castle to collect a small matter of $25,000 claimed by unreasonably tradesmen.

While one of Ralph's friends engaged the amiable Sheriff in friendly conversation at the front door, Ralph beat an orderly retreat, with the Castle's silver out of the back door.

After a housewarming in the rough, and bones leaping at the hearth, a resolute spirit, Ralph moved to West Fifty-fourth street, New York.

"ODDS AND ENDS"

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, illustrating it with sketches and photographs of her own original models.

Lady Duff-Gordon has just opened a new establishment in Paris, thus putting her in even closer touch with that centre of fashion. Her American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

THERE are a number of odd fashions that I want to speak about this week. One of them is really important in its way, one of them alone would justify my mentioning it.

And now let me give you one or two little hints concerning the novelties, of which women are always anxious to have early news so that they may be among the first to display the actual—and possibly attractive—things. If you have any such desire, you must then make all haste to secure one of the latest and longest lace veils that exist.

These are in three sizes, which are meant to be drawn around the hat, and tied in a big and most decorative bow, rather toward one side at the back, or else just across there and brought round the neck for tying in an equally quaint position at the front.

They are much more of a novelty than the ordinary veil, though of the same material, they are of a different shape, and as their central pattern is quite light, they are consequently very becoming.

They are available in various colors, such as white, cream, brown and green, as well as in black, and are an exceedingly smart finish for the hair of medium length, which they are specially designed to accompany and complete. Such is but the new "flower pot" veil.

For the rest, you can match your hat or veil with a sunshade whose color and shape is deeply bordered with tulle, and which has a deep different and soft outline, and a deeply embroidered with gold or silver, and a very deep border.

For the rest, there are some more of the novelties, but I will not say more about them now. I will only say that they are all very becoming and very smart.

The Theoretical Mother

By Haryot Holt Dey.

THERE are several kinds of mothers: ideal mothers, other-mothers, step-mothers, god-mothers, grandmothers and theoretical mothers. Theoretical mothers are the newest; a product of an overcivilization; they work out their theories on their children, organize mothers' clubs, conduct motherhood campaigns, attend mothers' congresses, write books for mothers, edit mothers' magazines, furnish statistics and all kinds of propaganda for the further spread of motherhood and the perpetuation of the human race, and have more responsibility than anybody. They have the facts.

The victim of the theoretical mother is the person you have to feel sorry for, though. Last summer his mother came to visit me in the country, and brought him with her. He was only a tiny child of two or thereabouts, and his mother was the assistant editor of a magazine that told mothers how to bring him up. He was a wide-eyed, scrawny little fellow with a head like a baby's, and a face like a little wrinkled old man, and he smelled of carbolic.

He said his clothes always had to be disinfected on account of germs. It wasn't at all like the baby picture on the cover of the magazine.

As soon as the theoretical mother arrived she retired to her room to write an article on "How to Travel with a Baby," and as soon as she got it off by mail she fed him eight ounces of malted, sterilized, condensed milk, brought from town, and then wired the fact to the editor-in-chief of the magazine.

Miss Katherine Elkins, Who Jilted the Duke d'Abruzzi

Who will break up this remorseless circle of masculine heart-breakers, of which Robert Bacon, Jr., is the latest victim?

Miss May was, and is a great belle, she is a beauty, her coloring is very dark and she has wonderful dark brown eyes. Bobbie's devotion was remarkable. After he graduated from Harvard he got a place in the state Department. It was a "job," only paying $1,800 a year. He had to live on this, for his parents wanted to test him. Gossip says that he lived on love and spent the whole $1,800 on candy and flowers for his beautiful fiancée.

was very well known there. She became engaged to a Newport-New York man, Charlie Sands, a brother of Miss Anna Sands and Mrs. Teddy Gerry. And so all's well that ends well. These marriages have not disrupted the Jilt Club. It will reign so long as men are foolish enough to propose and girls exert their privilege to change their minds—unless some sort of social earthquake intervenes to break it up.

MY SECRETS OF BEAUTY

"Begin to massage the scalp at the parting of the hair on the crown."

MME. CAVALIERI gives valuable advice of a timely nature in to-day's article on "Summer Care of the Hair." She explains the method of the German specialists, who use a burning-glass to stimulate lazy scalps, but advises moderation in its use. She describes also the severe, but, in some cases, successful treatment by alternate applications of hot and cold towels, or of ice.

Mme. Cavaleri also fully describes the best method of massaging the scalp, and recommends certain cleansing and tonic lotions, to which she publishes the formulae.

No. 122-SUMMER CARE OF THE HAIR -

By Mme. Lina Cavaleri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

By Mme. Lina Cavaleri.

WITH Summer approaching I would be anxious of my duty to my army of charming American readers and I will write for them some timely warnings and advice about the care of the hair.

Let me first call attention to the device of a German hair specialist I know who arrives on one can cure baldness in a curious way. He has named it the sun-dry cure. When the alopecia, that is baldness, begins to appear, not by a general thinning of the hair, but in spots or circles, beginning with a point scarcely larger than a pin head and spreading until it is as large as a dollar, the best treatment, the German specialist says, is a concentration of life-giving sunshine upon the barren spot. A burning glass should be held as close as possible to permit to the spot where the hair is thin.

Let the person upon a hot head these spots are appearing stand near an open window, or out of doors. Let the hair be parted well about the thin spot and let some one hold the burning glass at a comfortable distance yet an effective distance from the head. If the stinging sensation be painful the glass must be farther removed. If the heat on the concentrated sun's rays be barely felt the glass must be still nearer the head. The person's own comfort must be the guide. This focusing the sun's rays until the heat is perceptible stimulates the growth of the hair and has caused seemingly arid patches of scalp to become once more well covered with hair. Certainly the results obtained by this great Berlin hair specialist would go far to prove that his theory is correct. I should advise giving it a thorough trial in such cases.

If the hair is thin and the circulation in the scalp less vigorous than it should be, a method of treatment, used in some of the best beauty parlors in St. Petersburg, a city whose women have magnificent hair, is this: Clean and simple one. Fill two bowls with water, one with water as hot as can be borne, the other cold water, or, if preferred, with cracked ice. Dip a soft old towel into the hot water and press this upon the scalp. Leave it on for two or three minutes. Then another towel also old and soft and small, or a large napkin, into the bowl of cold water, and press the towel upon the scalp. If the bowl be filled with cracked ice, wrap the towel about the head and place it upon the head. Leave it there for one minute. Then repeat the hot water application. Then the cold water or ice. Let each be three times repeated. Dry the scalp thoroughly with a towel and by rubbing it with the finger tips. Shake out the hair well, so that the strands will not cling to each other. Part of the invigorating treatment given by one of the best New York hair specialists consists in rubbing small strokes of hair briskly between the palms of the hands. This detaches the hairs from each other, making each stand out individually, it also gives the hair, giving it the peculiar gloss of health, not of cosmetics, that is one of the unique features of a good grooming.

I have said so much about massaging of the scalp that it seems useless to repeat it, yet from the hundreds of letters that come to me I judge it is necessary that the writers have not used this indispensable aid to growth of the hair.

When hair falls out—authorities differ as to whether the normal daily fall of hair be ten to thirty hairs or fifty to one hundred. A Venetian authority says ten to thirty during the most of the year and fifty to one hundred during the spring and fall, when the scalp is in a crop most easily. Is the normal fall of hair. When hair falls out, I began to say, it is because the hair roots are not nourished by enough blood. In other words, the blood does not circulate freely enough around the hair roots of the scalp. How, then, can the fresh supply of blood be obtained in the scalp? In our word, massage. Massage the scalp with the finger tips. Begin with a slow, firm pressure at the outer rim of the scalp, or the hair line beginning at the temples to the top of the head, above the middle of the forehead, the scalp together, but gently. Move the finger tips until all round the hair line until your finger tips meet at the back of the neck. Then repeat again at the temples, at the crown of the head, work the finger about with the slow, gentle pressure of the tips until your fingers again meet at the back of the head. Continue this finger pressure in circles until you reach the apex, or crown of the head. There use a firm rotary motion.

If the hair be oily it is well to dip the fingers into this dampener, or better still, pour a half teaspoonful of it upon the parts of the head most affected with the scalp, unseen formations, massaging the liquid well into the scalp.

Or should the scalp be too dry this will help to cleanse it of the scale-like formations that choke the oil glands and cause the hair to fall out.

I always advise my readers to avoid any preparations that choke the pores, as most whiteners do. But since some readers insistently ask for formulas for whiteners, I have given this one, advising you not to use it too often. You yourselves must be the judge of how often when I have advised you never to use whiteners.

nervousness, which causes the defective circulation. Once the hair has progressed to baldness and that state in which the scalp is bare and the skin tight and shining, there is no cure. But in the early stages good results follow intelligent treatment.

The hair must be kept absolutely free from dust, and to this end it must be carefully brushed every night. Never retire without brushing your hair, giving it, if possible, one hundred strokes, to free it from all the collection of dust of the day.

The hair should be washed whenever it is unusually dirty or greasy, other than pure white or black. If the scalp is overladen with sebum, it is a bad time for washing. If the hair will begin to fall out. Ordinarily once a fortnight is enough. But after a journey in a motor car, or automobile, or journey in exposure to the dust, it should be washed by a shampoo. Use a non-alkaline soap, and rinse in many waters. A flat pan with one side set down to fit the neck, so that the head may rest easily in it, is a very German device for hair washing. Gettin' Rid of "Superfluous" Women.

Of course this or any has no "superfluous women"—the idea is not only absurd, but uncharitable and generally objectionable. Up in New England there is a small area where "old maids" are more than ordinarily numerous, owing to the exodus of enterprising young men in search of newer and better fields of endeavor; but all over the Western part of the United States men are in the majority, and the advent of more women is much encouraged.

In England, however, the case is different, as noted in the easier response of women of all classes to the demand for brides that come from Canada and other colonies. Even the music halls have made note of the fact, and the joke about the numerical inequality of the sexes (not expressed quite like that) is already stale in those launds of humor.

Now, it appears, the boom is about to wane, for Dr. R. J. Ewart, writing in Nature, comes to the conclusion that various forces are operating to restore the numerical equality of the sexes. In his own words:

"We may possibly look upon ourselves at the present moment as being at the zenith of a female oscillation, and as time progresses, held probably by a saving of female life, a more numerical equality of sex will be established."

Here is an interesting statement of the present position of the sex balance.

equal; from the fifth to the fifteenth year, the mortality among the females is slightly higher than among the males but from that time onwards the females relatively increase.

The result is a surplus of women, for whom there are not enough husbands to go round; and it is because these superfluous women naturally direct their energies into other spheres that, according to Dr. Ewart, we have witnessed the great outburst of feminine activity in politics.

The agitation is no new one, according to the doctor, and apparently is dependent for its strength and vitality on the relative numbers of the sexes. If the present female oscillation has not yet reached its zenith the agitation will continue; if the reverse is happening, as there is reason to believe to be the case, then the present movement, after certain bursts of rejuvenescence, should slowly subside, to be again resurrected at some future epoch in the history of the world. That is Dr. Ewart's theory.

Few theories seem better calculated than this to engage the ear of the laity, and it will be prudent to hasten away from it to the less dangerous consideration of Dr. Ewart's reasons for supposing that "the female oscillation has reached its zenith."

He produces figures showing that young mothers, of ages below thirty, have more girl than boy children, but that in their majority years the births show a preponderance of boys. In other words, the younger the mother the more likely are her children to be girls.

This, as Dr. Ewart argues, provides the clue to the "self-regulating balance" by which nature adjusts these numerical differences.

For when women are in the majority, as at present, they are in less demand for wives and marry at more mature ages—the result being that there are more bald boys than girls, and a consequent adjustment of the sex balance in the next generation. The tendency is enhanced by the effect of modern education, which is all in the direction of deferring the age of marriage.

Dr. Ewart thinks that the relationship of the age of the father to the sex of the child is much the same as the mother, and where disparity in age occurs the influence may neutralize each other, "so that with a mother of about twenty and a father of about thirty the chance of a boy or a girl should be about as equal as nature can make such a problem."

The marriage age is steadily rising, and Dr. Ewart adds the opinion that an average marriage age of between twenty-seven and twenty-eight "should produce a population in which the males would be about as equal as nature can make such a problem."
